EQUITABILITY: ROAD SAFETY FOR ALL THROUGH VISION ZERO AND SUSTAINABLE SAFETY

Registration is now open for individuals and organizations to participate in the 2020 Joint Conference of the Canadian Association of Road Safety Professionals (CARSP) and La Prévention Routière Internationale (PRI) in partnership with the Traffic Injury Research Foundation (TIRF) and Desjardins.

This joint conference will create synergies by integrating two milestone events, the 30th CARSP Conference and the 14th PRI World Congress in Montréal, an amazing metropolis in beautiful Québec. From June 15th to 18th, 2020 we will be hosting this premier road safety event in Canada with hundreds of participants expected to be in attendance.

The theme of the conference is "Equitability: Road Safety for all through Vision Zero and Sustainable Safety."

For a long time, endeavors to improve road safety were guided by the three E-s: engineering, enforcement and education. Over the years, additional E-s have been identified and more recently "equitability" has been added to the growing list. It refers to the idea that road safety is a right for all road users. In other words, road safety for all. Today, however, there is no road safety for all. Rather, there is an unequal distribution of road safety across road users, between countries, and between rich and poor.

In addition to adding E-s to the list, something else happened; a paradigm shift. Rather than accepting deaths and injuries as the price we pay for mobility, road safety professionals around the world began to believe that it was possible to be mobile without paying this price. The shift began in Sweden in the 1990s with Vision Zero and in the Netherlands with Sustainable Safety. The foundation of this new approach is that serious injuries and deaths should not be an acceptable consequence of mobility. Instead, the protection of human lives is a priority and road safety is everybody's business.

We invite you to be a part of this global effort to make roads safer for all road users, anywhere, anytime. Your participation in this international conference is an excellent opportunity to help accomplish this goal. Please take some time to review this registration brochure which explains the opportunities and benefits of attending this event.

Register today as seating will be limited.

Yours sincerely,

On behalf of the organizing committee:

Marie Soleil Cloutier, CARSP Conference

Ward Vanlaar, COO TIRF
